In this poem Ruskin Bond is the speaker, he speaks about his grandma. His grandma was 62 years old, she behaved like a child, she had a childish nature but the poet called his grandma as genius because she could climb a tree at the age of 62 years. Grandma felt happier on a tree than in a lift. Grandma had been climbing trees since six years; she learnt the art of climbing from her loving brother. People advised her to stop climbing the trees and grow old gracefully. But she did not accept their words and laughed at them and said she would grow old disgracefully. One day she climbed the tree but could not come down. She was rescued with great difficulty from the family members. Family members consulted the doctor and the doctor strictly advised her to take bed rest for a week. The kids and family member sighed with relief and tucked up her well. She felt miserable in the bed. The moment she became stronger she demanded her son to build a house in the treetop. Her son was a dutiful and a caring person, he built a house in a treetop for his mother with the poet's expert assistance. Now grandma sits there upholding her right to reside in a tree.
